

SPECIAL REPORTS

Special report: Unusual animal models of autism

BY SPECTRUM

8 SEPTEMBER 2021

NATALIE NELSON

In the past two decades, some autism researchers have turned to simple animals, such as roundworms, fruit flies and zebrafish, for their investigations. Others have sought answers from experiments with frogs, birds and even octopuses. In this special report, we describe these discoveries and the impact that alternative animal models have had on autism research.